4-1-2014

The Psychology of Black Women and Feminine Identity

Angel E. Carlin

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.xula.edu/xulanexus

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://digitalcommons.xula.edu/xulanexus/vol11/iss1/2

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by XULA Digital Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in XULAnexUS by an authorized editor of XULA Digital Commons. For more information, please contact ksiddell@xula.edu.
The Psychology of Black Women and Feminine Identity

Angel E. Carlin, Psychology

Faculty Mentor: Dr. Brian L. Turner, Psychology

Abstract
Over the course of an academic semester, students enrolled in the Black Psychology course explored various components regarding the composition of the cognitive processing, sociocultural awareness, and behavioral functioning of African Americans within a Eurocentric and patriarchal society. The assignment was to analyze any personally resonating aspect of black psychology by utilizing both outside texts and course materials as references that support the student’s thoughts in a critical format. In focusing on the placement of black women in America, this scholarly note examines influences related to one’s exhibition of sexuality and self through a historical lens which provides the basis of understanding the rate of feminine expression and how it may flourish or be suppressed by the individual. Examples of situations in which specific factors influence identity are included to provide critical insight. The points discussed in the piece attempt to use the knowledge of past circumstances to help better understand the similarities between current issues and future nuances in the way in which blackness is assessed and expressed within society. The paper also looks into the severity of these issues, how they are understood within the black community and how the mental health of African Americans is studied in empirical research.

Key Terms:
- African Americans
- Identity
- Slavery
- Feminism
- Psychology
- Women